

Whom Should You Marry? (Italy, 1998)

Whom should you marry?
The one who loves you; or the one whom you love?
Whatever the decision, you have to carry
The risk of a wrong choice getting onto your nerve!

Your sweetheart, the one whom you love
For whom you will be willing to serve
Might never love you, but you don't mind that
You can be happy even with her presence, or a chat

But there will always be one problem
For lot of running around, you must be game
You may need to work hard for her satisfaction
But you brain may not be willing for all this action

On the other hand, the one who loves you
Will always be willing to serve you
She will put in extra efforts to offer
Everything to you, so that you don't have to suffer

Here the problem is, that you have to tolerate
Someone, whom in your mind you might even hate,
Around you, she would be always willing to dance
But your heart may not want to throw even a glance

This great dilemma of heart and brain
Would continue till eternity without gain
In both the options we might hope for reciprocity
But that may never happen, what a pity!!

If you ask me to express my choice
For 'the one who loves you', I'd say in a clear voice
As love can develop, when together you live
Since Love is not only a noun, but a verb transitive
-Prasad Sovani